SPOTLIGHT ON OUR BLOOMING DESERT PLANTS

“Desert: n. Arid land with usually sparse vegetation”

When you think about the desert in Arizona, your first thought isn't going to be of flowering plants. You might imagine a barren landscape brutally baked by the sun. However, Arizona is known for its wide variety of natural wonders and its desert plants' ability to bloom should not be a surprise. While the deserts may be hot, they are anything but barren.

Cacti are classified as flowering plants, meaning they all can produce flowers in the right conditions. One factor that affects if a cactus will bloom is its age. Some species won't bloom until they are at least 30 years old. All cacti have the potential to bloom, but whether or not they bloom during the flowering season depends on a few particular conditions such as air temperature and amount of light and water they receive. Typically, you can expect the majority of cacti in the Meadview area to bloom between late February and June. Cacti bloom at differing times depending on the region and type of cactus, so if you plant a cactus garden be sure to plant several varieties to be able to enjoy a colorful show over a longer period of time.

Cacti enjoy resting and hibernating during the winter, soaking in the rain and then blooming into their radiant, colorful glory in mid to late Spring. The most common cacti in the Meadview area are Prickly Pear, Barrel Cactus, Spiny Star Cactus and Cholla.

The blooming season for most cacti is short. Some species may bloom and die in a single day and others can last weeks from the budding stage to flowering. Typically, the flowers open during the day and close at night. Have your photo taking devices ready to get the best advantage of the short blooming cycle.

ANTHONY’S SPORTS CORNER

The Kentucky Derby race was run on May 3. Sovereignty came in first place over the favored horse, Journalism. Journalism came in second. The Kentucky Derby is the first leg of the Triple Crown. The second race, The Preakness Strakes will be in two weeks on May 17. All 20 of the horses that raced in the Kentucky Derby were traced back to be decedents of Secretariat, the Triple Crown winner in 1972. The late Toby Keith had a fascination about horse racing and it was a dream of his to have a horse in the Kentucky Derby. Saturday that dream came true when his horse, Render Judgment raced.

In the NHL, the Vegas Golden Knights made it to the second round of the playoffs. They play the Edmonton Oilers for Round 2. The Golden Knights lost game #1 to the Oilers. Game 2 is Thursday in Las Vegas. Games 3 and 4 will be in Edmonton.

In MLB, the Arizona Diamondbacks are in 4th place in the NL West Division with the record of 18-16. The LA Dodgers are in 1st place in the NL West Division with a record of 23-11. The Atlanta Braves are in 4th place in NL East Division with a record of 15-18. The NY Yankees are in first place in the AL East Division with a 19-15 record. The Detroit Tigers in the AL and the NY Mets in the NL are tied for the best records in baseball with 22-13 records .

The NBA playoffs are underway. The LA Lakers were beat in the 1st round. The Cleveland Cavaliers are the favorite to win it all this year.

The NFL draft was held the last weekend of April. The Arizona Cardinals did their job and focused on defense. They drafted some good players that hopefully will help the team.

NASCAR will be in Kansas City at the Kansas Speedway on May 11, Mother's Day. On May 18, NASCAR will be at The North Wilkesboro Speedway in North Carolina. The WNBA starts their season this week. Its going to be fun watching Caitlin Clark play in her 2nd season. The Indiana Fevers played Brazil in a exhibition game on May 4 and the Fevers won 108-44.

As always, you can watch your favorite sporting events at The Fisherman's Landing Bar. Until the next issue, keep watching sports, my friends.

DO I NEED A FIRE?

By Luis Vega
Wilderness Columnist

We have all heard of the need for a fire when in the mountains or desert--for warmth, keeping wild animals away and to give us a sense of comfort when lost. But do you really need a fire if you're lost, stuck or broke down in Mohave County? It takes energy to collect firewood, to start a fire, to keep it going and to keep it contained. It is very unlikely that wild animals would be a threat. The last grizzly bear in Arizona was killed in 1939 near Springerville in the White Mountains. Most mountain lions and bears that I've run into in Arizona were more afraid of me than I was of them so no need there.

Remember the 2002, Chediski fire in northeastern Arizona? It was started by a stranded quad runner that was trying to attract the attention of a news helicopter. I guess they succeeded in drawing attention to themselves but the Chediski and Rodeo fires became the largest wildfire in Arizona history. Do you really want that kind of notoriety for the sake of comfort?

If you become lost in Mohave County, focus on what you need to survive and not on what makes you feel comfortable. If you don't need a fire to keep from becoming hypothermic, save your energy. If you have the proper clothes for the season, you should be fine.

A shelter might be more important in keeping you dry or out of the snow. If you decide that you must have a fire for warmth or for signaling, be sure of the surroundings and the weather. Not that the wind ever blows in Mohave County, but if you have a fire going and the wind kicks up and blows sparks into dry brush, you might be in more trouble than just being lost.

As part of your day-pack you should have at least two ways to start a fire. A basic fire-starting kit should include a Bic lighter and waterproof matches. In my pack I also carry a road flare. If I'm in a survival situation I don't want creative ways to start fires like steel wool and a battery or a bow-drill. I want something that'll start a fire even with wet wood. A road flare meets that need.

I usually take two flares. These are only used in survival situations where a fire can't be started by any other way- snow covered or wet wood. A road flare is easily started with the scratch point on the tip. Once lit and your fire started, the flare can be put out and saved to start again. To put out a flare, push the burning end of the flare into a rock until it's smothered. Starting it a second time takes more effort. Have some tinder to start and burn next to the end of the flare until it catches. That is why I carry two.

If I must have a fire in the snow or soaked ground, I start by scraping away as much snow as I can and then build a platform, about two-feet square made of large-to-medium sized sticks. This keeps the fire off the snow or wet ground. Then I take the small and medium sized driest sticks and tinder and make a square log-cabin type pile of wood with an open area in the middle. That is where I put the road flare. When lit, the flare burns like a torch shooting out of the end. Aim it at the medium-sized sticks. It will burn very hot and long enough, about 15-minutes, to get even damp or wet wood to burn. As the fire burns, I push some of the coals to one side of the platform and then place wet wood over the coals to dry while keeping the rest of the fire at the other end of the platform for heat and making more coals. As the wood dries, I move it over to the fire end, move more coals to the drying end and add more damp wood to dry.

If the ground is dry, remove all combustible material from where the fire will be and be sure of the surroundings - including what's above you. Strong winds can kick up at any time so have green branches to place over the fire to stop sparks from flying. The green branches are also good for making smoke in the event there's an aircraft in the area looking for you.

Keep the fire manageable - small rather than a large blaze. You can sit closer to a small fire for warmth, it uses less fuel and can be put out in the event the wind picks up.

Remember, most of the time in a survival situation in Mohave County, a fire is a luxury. You might want to have the fixings ready to light if needed, but save your energy and focus on staying alive.
